RECALLS BATTLE OF NORTH POINT

Celebration of Maryland Day To-Morrow Will Commemorate Defeat of British.

IS HOLIDAY IN BALTIMORE.

Interesting Programme at Old Line State Pavilion to Be-Followed by a Reception in the Evening.

In selecting their respective State days the State Commissioners have selected the anniversary of the day most important i the history of their Commonwealth, Some have chosen the date of admission into the Union. Maryland has chosen the anniversary of the battle of North Point, which will be to-marrow. The day is obserted h Baltimore as a general hollowy, and dear to the hearts of all Murgianders. It was this battle that inspired the pen of Francis Scott Key when he wrote the "Star-Spangled Banner."

The battle of North Point was one of the most important in the War of 1812 The humiliating events of the capture of Washington in 1814 created intense excitement throughout the country, but were somewhat stoned for by the able defense of Baltimore, which soon afterwards oc

On Sunday, September 11, 1814, the British fleet appeared off Palapaco Bay with a large force of land troops under the command of General Ross. At sunrise the next morning he landed 9,000 troops at North Point, twelve miles above Balti-more, and at the same time the British fleet bombarded Fort McHenry, which guarded the harbor of Baltimore, a city of 60,000 inhabitants at that time, and place against which the British held a grudge, because of the numerous priva-teers.

The citizens of Baitimore had wisely provided for any emergency. A large number of troops was gathered around the city. Fort McHenry was garrieoned by 1000 men, under General Armisteau, and supported by batteries. The citizens had constructed a long line of fortifications on what afterwards became Pattersen's Park.

LANDING CAUSED ALARM.

LANDING CAUSED ALARM. Intelligence of the landing of the British at North Point produced great alarm Baltimore. The veteran General Samuel Smith was in chief command of the military at Esitimore, then about 2,000 strong. General Winder had joined him September 10, with all the forces at his strong. General. Winder had Joined him September 10, with all the forces at his command.

When news of the landing of the British came, General Smith sant General Stricker with $200 men in that direction to watch the movements of the havaders and to act as circumstances might require. Some volunteers and militis were sent to co-operate with General Stricker.

Feeling confident of success, General Ross, accompanied by Admiral Cockburn, rode gayly in front of the troops as they moved toward Baltimore. They had marched about an hour, when they halted at a tavern where they spent another hour in carsiess carousing.

From Colonel Sterretts regiment General Stricker had sent forward companies led by Captains Levering and Howard, 15 in number, and commanded by Major R. K. Heath, They were accompanied by Asquith's and a few other rifemen, seventy in number, and commanded by Asquith's and a few other rifemen, seventy in number, and commanded by Asquith's and a few other rifemen, seventy in number, and commanded by the seven miles from Bultimore. Two of Asquith's riflemen, concealed in a hollow fired upon Ross and Cockburn as they were riding at the head of the troops, when the former fell from his horse mortally wounded and died in the arms of his favorite aid before his bearers could reach

The command devolved on Colonei A. A. Broeke. Under his direction the entire invading force pressed forward, and about p. m., September 12, met the first line of General Stricker's main body. Then a severe combat began.

BRITISH ABANDON ATTACK. The battle raged for two hours, when the ricans to fall back towards Baltimore; and at Worthington's Mills, half a tie in front of the entrenchments thrown up by the citizens, they were joined by up by the citizens, they were joined by General Winder and his force. The British halted and bivouacked for the night on the battledeld.

Meanwhile the British fact had prepared to attack Fort McHenry, and on the morning of September 13 began bombardment, which was kept up until the next morning. At the same time the land forces began to move on Baltimore. Their movements were very slow and cautious. Colonel Brooks had an interview with Admiral Cockburn, and it was decided that the British movements on land and water were failures, and prudence demanded immediate abandonment of the enterprise. At 2 a. m., in the midst of the darkness and the rain, the land troops stole away to their ships, and at an early hour their hombardment of Fort McHenry ceased, and the British ships withdrew Baltimore was saved.

The grateful citizens of Baltimore devised a memorial for the salvation of their city, and for its heroes. They exceed a monument which stands in Calvert street, almost in the center of the city, it is 35 feet high and was erected in 1815 at a cost of 300,000.

To-morrow the Maryland Commission will celebrate the anniversary of this battle, as Maryland Day at the World's Fair. They have arranged for an interesting programme during the day, which will be followed by a reception at the State building in the swaning.

OF EMPRESS AN'S PORTRAIT TELLS HER EXPERIENCE WITH CHINA'S GREAT WOMAN

Miss Kate Carl, the American Artist, Now in St. Louis, Says the Ruler of the Celebrated Empire Is Far From Being a Tigress in Her Manner, and Possesses Many Virtues-Explains Pecultarities of the Picture, Which Is Symbolic-The First Likeness Ever Made of Her Majesty by a Foreigner.

council. She would pose for awhile, as long as the average alting. Then she would suggest a walk or a boating. At this I accepted her invitations, because I thought I had to, but I did not make much progress with the painting. When I found that I could remain and paint without giving offense to her Majesty. I would remain and work. She was very considerate, she would say: 'Come, you must so for a walk. You must not paint so long. You must not work so hard. You will get thin, and thin people are not pretty.' 'Some times she would give me two or three sittings a day, just as she felt inclined, and according to the time she had. had. She posed for the face and hands and feet, and the ladies of the court posed for the figure. Sometimes she would pose so that I could get the action of her bely. The ladies who posed for the body were not the Frincisses, but ladies of high standing. Of course they fill not wear her Matesty's gown, they merely posed so

The painting needs a key to explain the significance of the Egures in the picture, for as it is no one but a Clinese or someone thoroughly familiar with the Clinese cust ons would understand it. Everything in the putning is symbolic of her Majesty's life. I am trying to write a key which will explain why the birds are fiving around her head, and why I have used certain figures in the screen in the backgrant.

"I could not use any lights or shades, nor could I paint any folds for the roke of the artistic effect in the drapery. It has a Chibrese official painting, and, therefore, had to be painted according to the Chinese rich and form, for the sake of efficient and form, for the sake of efficient and form, for the sake of efficient had to be sacrificed for the sake of detail. That is why it has such a still look, as if it was made of sheet-from. "I know arrists who do not understand be circumstances under which it was painted will criticise it as backing in the artistic source but it is not an artistle plature—it was not panied as such. It is an official Chinese portrait. The seams of the seleves had to be fust so, the figures in the gown had to be worked out in details At first I regretted that I could not have more liberty in painting the portrait, out now I am giad I could get away from the trood achied sufficiently to paint a detailed picture that would please the officials.

Her mode of living and her habits are very simple.

'I was simply at American git painting a commission from her Asjecty, I did not try to assume any of the Chinese Coart customs, nor did her Majesty expect me to try. Once I tool her I was going to try to make the Chinese box, which is very pictly and graceful.

'O, you can't, said her Majesty, You are an American ladies wear corsets, I am told.' I made the bow but not with the grace that the Chinese indies have, but it greatly pleased her Majesty.

'She wanted to see me dressed in the Chinese dress, and I so dressed once, to please her. She capped her hands to gether in chilatish delight. I had no idea you would look like that, she said, If you had dark holr you would be quite pretty. They do not like blonde hair, they sdreire black hair, and I do not blame tham for they have such beautiful hands.

'She has beautiful hands and feet. Her Majesty is very wise. She does not approve of bound feet, yet she would not issue an edict prohibiting the gracifice but she recommends that the binding of the feet, and many of the Chinese women committed solicide because they considered large.
